Collected Poems by Ted Hughes - Goodreads

Precocious and ambitious, Hughes began winning literary awards with his debut collection, The Hawk in the Rain (1957), thanks to Plath's encouragement. Earthy and mystical and steeped in folklore and myth, Hughes wrote lush and confident nature poems until Plath's death, after which his poetry turned spare and wary.

Hughes wrote the cycle of poems about 'Crow' in the late 1960s, several years after Sylvia Plath's death. Crow was a far more experimental and avant-garde book than Hughes's previous volumes of poetry, and 'King of Carrion' is an accessible but representative poem from this enthralling if unsettling collection.
