Decolonization, process by which colonies become independent of the colonizing country. Decolonization was gradual and peaceful for some British colonies largely settled by expatriates but violent for others, where native rebellions were energized by nationalism. After World War II, European countries generally lacked the wealth and political support necessary to suppress faraway revolts; they ...

The decolonization process was occurring simultaneously with another phenomenon, that of 'British decline'. The two developments were, of course, intrinsically linked, given that Britain's imperial system was the foundation of its world power. As Bevin declared in a memorandum curiously titled 'The threat to Western civilisation':
