Short Course In Rum A

The Short Course in Rum began, naturally, as a look at noble, fragrant, complex, wood-aged rum: the type of liquor that's served in snifters and consumed slowly, even reverently. Author Lynn Hoffman ( Short Course in Beer ) had the suspicion—maybe even the conviction—that rum was a serious, big deal sort of thing, somewhere above single-malt scotch and maybe (just) below cognac.

For many years we kept hearing from distillers, importers, wholesalers, retailers and on-premise staff about the lack of rum information, courses and books. With those concerns in mind, we set out to create a course that would take a student from knowing nothing about rum, to being well-versed on the subject.

The story of rum naturally begins with the story of its base ingredient, sugarcane. A perennial grass of the genus Saccharum, prior to cultivation sugarcane grew naturally throughout tropical SE Asia from Burma to central China & Pacific. While there is evidence to suggest cultivation as early as 4000BC, the earliest record of human consumption is found in an ancient Indian sanskrit manuscript ...

By this point, rum accounted for 80% of New England's exports. Eighty Percent! And it also solidified a slave-dependent economic system. The more slave traders and slaves who wanted rum, the more sugar production was needed in order to produce molasses. The more sugar you need the more slaves you need to produce that sugar on the islands.

History of Rum - A Brief Story on the Origins of Rum

Short Run vs. Long Run . In the study of economics, the long run and the short run don't refer to a specific period of time, such as five years versus three months. Rather, they are conceptual time periods, the primary difference being the flexibility and options decision-makers have in a given scenario.

The Short Run vs. the Long Run in Microeconomics

Not enough about rum in the book to call it a "short course." Way too many recipes compared to facts, history, and other information about rum itself. Too many little side trips into things having nothing to do with rum. The book reads like it's a story about the author with a bit of rum stuff thrown in.

Katherine Buzza, Short Course Coordinator (Narrator): Short courses are courses run through the university schools that range from one day to three months, and they are non-accredited programs, which means that they don't have assessment tasks. They're just courses that are really practical, hands-on, and a great way to build new skills.
